nine papers aim to help staff members in England's colleges of further or adult education to improve their interpersonal skills. The first paper outlines basic social interaction skills. The second paper covers current methods of analyzing group interaction, including observation of role behavior and of interaction flow and frequency. The third paper lists group functions within organizations, such as maintenance of membership, decision making, and task performance. Methods and objectives of team building are examined in the fourth paper. The fifth paper recommends transactional analysis as the best way to understand social and personal interaction and discusses its basic concepts, including ego states, interpersonal transactions, scripts, and games. Nonverbal communication is the subject of the sixth paper, while the seventh looks at various types of counseling interviews. The eighth paper summarizes other approaches to interpersonal skill development, such as management training and sensitivity training. The concluding paper suggests ways to continue learning interpersonal skills. Lists of organizations, addresses, and books for further reading are attached. Author: rw

A novel approach to traditional subjects, the wide variety of opinions, and the extensive introductory material lift this book out of the ordinary readings class and will reward the reader with understanding and appreciation of a complex subject. This collection of 37 provocative selections on human communication shares with the reader the experience and insights of some of the best minds in the discipline. The selections, for the most part, deal with traditional communication topics in a novel way. For example, in the chapter on verbal communication, there is a selection on profane language; in the chapter on nonverbal communication, there is a section entitled "The Silent Language of Love"; in the chapter on small group communication, there is the Parkinson article on laws in groups; and in the chapter on mass communication, there is one on today's interest in sexually
