the cambridge drill club records consist of one book which seems to have served as all all purpose record book for the club the book begins with the club's constitution and by laws which is made up of seventeen articles and three amendments the constitution and by laws highlight the requirements for club membership list the club officers and their duties explain how to respond to delinquent members list the rules of voting state the goal of and rules surrounding drill exercises and contains an honor pledge to the other members as the final article the amendments comment upon member candidacy retouching upon membership requirements for regular members as well as fine and honorary members the book also contains a list of the names of the initial club members who had to pay 3 upon signing a list of the fine members members that promised to pay an annual assessment of 5 on signing that is dated october and november 1861 and a list of the honorary members also contained are the minutes of the meetings held by the cambridge drill club from 6 may 6 1861 to 21 april 1862 the meeting minutes list the day and date of the meeting and describe the course of each meeting very basically the minutes often mention how many members were present when voting was held and to what end the reading of the minutes from the previous meeting the reading of various status reports member resignations and discharges and the discussion and description of public club activities such as parades the minutes also mention the requests of other clubs to combine for drilling exercises dialogue concerning various club meeting places and debates concerning how to use leftover club funds after the final meeting minutes entry the book documents the names of members who have received money from the club and the amount it also lists the names of places and the monetary amount collected by club members from each location some of the locations listed are gramercy park hotel and union square which meant the club at some point collected money in new york city the records do not specify why the men listed received club funds but it is most likely that these amounts were compensation for work done for the club the records also do not describe the cause for which the money was collected from the various places a few pages have names inscribed at the top with a list of dates and the amount of work done by that specific person recorded underneath the amount of work is quantified in days 1 day 1 2 day 1 4 day etc the years are often missing from these entries dates but the years of 1870 and 1871 are present in some of the entries suggesting that this portion of the book was created around that time the book then contains a large number of blank pages and near the end writing picks up again consisting of scribbled names upside down on the bottom of the page the last few pages of the book contain what seems to be an inventory of various foods and their amounts with the month and day and unmarked numbers corresponding some of the foods listed are muffins bread beans and crumpets it is unclear what these foods were used for why they were recorded and to what organization these records belonged because this section of the book begins from the last page and moves backwards it may have been that this record book was used to record information from two different organizations the first being the cambridge drill club and the second unknown however the final page of the record book seems to belong to the records of the cambridge drill club as it lists the same places recorded earlier in the book gramercy park hotel union square with a sum total corresponding to each place which is probably the total amount of funds collected
